

Adaptive Release - Basics: Based on Review Status

Adaptive Release gives instructors the opportunity to display content to individuals or groups in the class based on criteria set. Once the rule is created, each student has to meet the specific criteria before they are allowed to access the content.

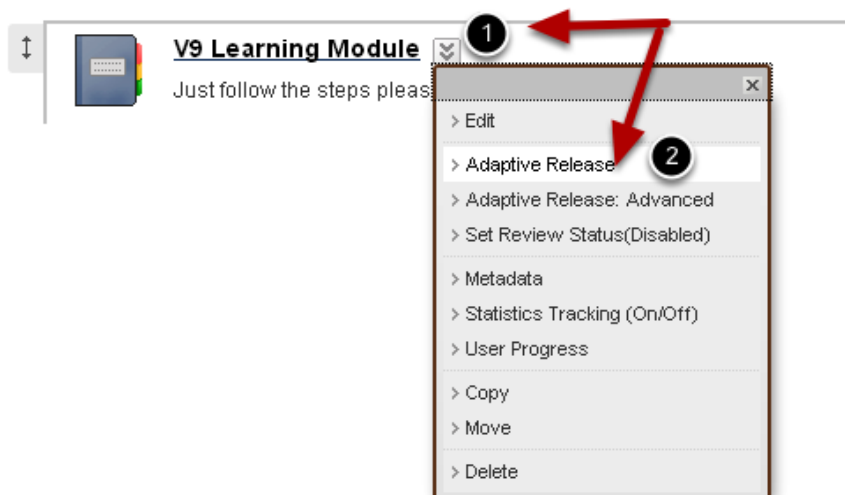

A rule can be configured to make an item available based on another item's review status. One example where this may be useful is to include a "Student Honor Code" document for a site, where students must read and agree to the information in that item for that site. Limiting availability based on review status requires the presence of an additional course item for which review status is enabled.
